Cohen, Stanley N. (1935-)

The biochemists Stanley N. Cohen and Herbert Boyer (1936-) developed the techniques that genetic engineering are based upon. Stanley N. Cohen was born in Perth Amboy, New Jersey, and received his bachelor's degree from Rutgers University and a doctorate later to form a company called Genentech to exploit this new technology. Cohen has continued working at Stanford, increasing our knowledge about plasmid biology. He has received many awards, including the National Medal of Science in 1988. Cohen married in 1961 and has two children.

Cold Fusion 57

Cold Fusion

On March 23, 1989, the chemists Stanley Pons (1943-) and Martin Fleischmann (1927-) held a press conference with officials at the University of Utah where they announced that a simple laboratory experiment had created excess heat that could only be explained by a process of fusion occurring at room temperatures (thus the term cold fusion). Fleischmann was a respected senior electrochemist from England and a Fellow of the Royal Society. Normally the results of such an experiment would be presented at a scientific meeting or published in a scientific journal. Pons, Fleischmann, and university officials chose such an unorthodox method because another scientist, the physicist Steven E. Jones (1949-) at the nearby Brigham Young University, was also engaged in the same research. Whoever claimed priority on such a breakthrough technology stood to earn millions of dollars from a source

★★★★★ 1 Review

Harry N. Abrams, 2002 - 238 pages

Unparalleled in scope and intimacy, Morton Beebe's beautiful photographic excursion around the City by the Bay contains more than 200 full-color pictures of favorite sights in and around the City by the Bay. The San Franciscans capture the vitality and allure of this diverse and fascinating city. Now this classic has been substantially revised and expanded -- with 90 new color photos and the Sometimes relaxing is as simple as doing something you enjoy, if you play an instrument or a sport, you might find that those activities calm you down. Winding cut for a few minutes in front of the television or a video game is OK too. Just make sure you don't spend too long in front of media. After more than 20 or 30 minutes, it stops being relaxing and can actually start to raise your stress levels.

Laughter really can be good medicine. Experts think that keeping a sense of humor—joking yourself, laughing and letting yourself enjoy life even on your worst days—can help you live longer.
